

Peter Montpelier Rentree

Sunday 28th 1874

Dear Sir,

In consequence of your important demands that I should give you other security than that which you hold, which apparently you & your friends consider worthless, I have obtained the cooperation of a few sacred ones of the best men in Montreal, all of them wealthy & who assume the mortgage & interest.

You assured Mr. Little onlyself that this was all you required, & I have complied with you and terms. He will assume ^{you} of this.

I propose to extend the mortgage for one year, so that I may not call upon my friends for too much money. We shall proceed immediately with the work required by the government &c. &c.

Of the Company which my friends propose to form is completed, as we hope, in the press. You will probably be pained there. But under any circumstances the prototype is now a commercial & respectable document which it was not a week ago.

If I am further ~~informed~~ of any action on the part of your friends or demanded married with their trusting letters, I shall report to it and I give them a taste of the truth they have given me.

I am now complied with all your conditions.

Yours truly
D. W. Robertson.
