

so certain of their being all right. As if I posted them myself, the Post office is ~~an~~ very long way from here

I wrote last Thursday just before I went to the Cayley's I staid there from Friday till Sunday, they were all as good to me as possible but I was very glad to get back here again. On the Friday they had a dinner party, I wore my grey silk with the silver waist A very nice young fellow called Mr. Hursey took me in to dinner, & afterwards I had a nice little chat with a Mr. Simpson, who I <sup>had</sup> met once before. The Cayley's wanted me to go back to another dinner-party this week, to meet the bishop (see how fine I am!) & even proposed for me to stay there a month, but I declined both invitations I have promised to go to the Moffatts & stay for one night, & as for luncheons we are always lunching out, however that generally marks in with our lectures or something of that sort.

Galelevin Smith's lectures are delightful, but he is a very miserable-looking man & a lonely desolate sort of old bachelor.

About coming home, I am on the lookout for someone to go with, if I do not find any one before next Tuesday I will go alone, it really does not much matter for there are no changes, & the Wilson's will see me in at one end & you will take me out at the other, <sup>Was</sup>

night - I will not feel very lonely.

I give Sara my best love & tell her I was very very glad to hear of our dear little meeting being begun again, & I hope it will continue & flourish -

We had such a delightful little tea-party here last night, all girls, & Dr & Mrs W were out - Alice & Ed has been in & taken up the hour I had hoped to spend in writing to you, we are going to lunch at the Hotel, Miss K - is going to marry Watson Turner, is it not funny?

Tell dear K that I am much disappointed at not being able to answer his letter but will do so tomorrow if possible, kind regards to Mary, tell her I wish she would go & see Sarah, she seemed to wish to know
