In one of his addresses Blair said "One of the first questions I ask on visiting a new town is "What is your medical charge?" and I have been astonished at their extent and value." "The question he was apt to ask when he came of visit some young doctors of the Province in Cornwall: "What are your books and the next word "Where is the nursery?"

The three branches in the house of the general practitioner - the library, the laboratory, and the nursery

A man fit to do the ordinary office practice in which each means an appellorment must have, and have desire deposits just as sound as a lamp on the tablet tender boys and the lamp post."

When I asked before the Libby assured he had ~~not~~ mentioned the three members of the private prothonotary, - the Libby, the Libby & the Libby.

He also said -

That was all about the Libby -
