

p181 p182

Order came through to print a journal for ~~him~~ ^{him} as he was the victim, and ~~the~~ ~~his~~ ^{his} first one frames which were made on expression of his early service of ~~him~~ ^{such} much made him a good confidant. But most of the work of the News office was ^{was} seven's enough and it ~~is~~ ^{was} no small task to run a weekly journal with its four or five editorials in each number. It was here that Cole was of greatest help to the board, ^{as Muniz says} and appeared to have an inexhaustible supply of material or news which he could easily put in type, on an emergency. During the years 1854 and 1855 alone it is ~~easy~~ ^{easy} to identify (?) of this was paid editorial in the Medical News alone in addition to his many original papers. As has been seen he was a rapid, methodical reader with a rare retentive memory, but in addition he had formed the habit of jotting down the first general he had read so that it could be called ^{on} when needed but often times putting out some ideas of his own which the reading had suggested. It was due to this habit that he finally acquired the charm of style which characterized his later publications that it had already begun to be evident at this time. It was due also to this that so many ~~valuable~~ ^{valuable} brief notes and just words of comment and commendation were promptly sent off to reforce the heart-jack of young reader whose fledgling articles he appeared to have read. Due also to this habit and jack of editorial writing on new and important subjects - his ideas were so well formulated and his information so exact ^{in expression} that when he came to write his ^{medical} correspondence from time to time in Baltimore it was done ^{throughout} with such a sureness of tone that it immediately superseded all other ^{general} medical treatises and ~~was~~ ^{to} ~~the~~ ^{the} and still continues to hold this position.
Though he ~~was~~ ^{was} subscribed to many journals himself he began early in his Philadelphia Journal work, what for fifteen years was his ^{editor} ^{editor} in Baltimore, or more to frequent the Library of the College of Physicians, where often ^{later} ^{later} he was to be seen in its old quarters on July 9 1889

W.O. is quite quiet in my children. Cf. in relation to this July 7/1889. Came a telegram from Charlie among the first for daughter or minor child. W.O. replied immediately "Welcome to little Anna"

Received from Anna Bulletin June 1902

John as he has been for a fortnight from when he has to move you after another when he always looks like a conqueror and they are certain to find an attachment to him in return. What to do is a real at odds. I suppose I shall like to know his feelings for