Dearest Margaret

I am going this morning to write to you a mere apology for a letter. The mail leaves at 9 a. m. and I have but little time. I arrived here about $\frac{1}{2}$ past 10 on Saturday evening I was thus late in consequence of waiting at Turket & lecture in the evening. The night was clear moonlight and the ~~road~~ road good otherwise I could not have done so. I am lodging here with Dr Furbish the Clerk of the Court, who invited Me to stay with him. I was at Mr. Christie's meeting, and at a Baptist meeting yesterday, and saw Mr. McCulloch who is very friendly and is about leaving for Halifax to take his brother's place in Dalhousie College. Jernmouth is quite a respectable town, I think larger than Pictou, though much less literary. It runs for more than two miles in one long street along the water, and the buildings all of wood are very much in the style of an American city large. The people are also very A-Mexican in their manners The country near the town is low and cultivated, with numerous stone dykes which give it, by moonlight, quite an old country look. I received your letter addressed to Tubut on Saturday, and you may be sure I was glad to receive it, not having heard from you for a week. I shall try after this to write twice in the week, though I am not quite sure that I shall succeed until I get to Dely. John and I are quite well, and I hope to have a good meeting to day.

I have now reached the extreme point of my journey and it is a comfort to feel that I shall henceforth in my journey begin to be wearing home. I am very sorry that the rain has again found its way to you. I hoped that we should at least have a light drizzle over our heads. It is useless for us to feel sad when we think of distance I am sometimes inclined to do so but I try to banish it, and to look hopefully to the future. Do not dear Margaret neglect anything tending to your health and comfort and do not deny yourself any help that you need Your own loving husband William
