anything done

Dearest,

I got two letters & a post card from you last night - so had quite a supply of news - you have certainly not been neglected by your friends, but I do not like the idea of your making tea & toast on your own account, I hope at least that the strawberry man goes up the street & supplies you liberally with fruit. If you are keeping you might add an egg to your bill of fare.

Mrs. Molson will be quite clear that I have treated you badly if she hears of such performances.

This morning a clear shining succeeded the rain of yesterday, & I have made the effort to get into the old routine & spent an hour or two on the shore. There I saw Mr & Mrs Taylor who already look refreshed. They gave me news of you directly of which I was glad. I am sorry that the book case does not look well. I fear that I at least had not a sufficiently collected mind to think the question out to advantage.

The weather is quite hot here, but with a delightful fresh breeze. I intend to try a dip in the sea a little later on. If this weather continues I shall wear some cotton stockings - there are two pairs of black ones in the top drawer.
