Dear Mr. Bernard,

We had a most lovely drive yesterday, not too cold, & the snow having fallen sufficiently to make good sleighing we went as far as The Wayside House & came back by another road.
The hemlock woods were wonderfully green & summer-like. I have always thought of them as being dark & dead in colour, as the winter pines usually are. The blue shadows are wonderful, & the hills so broken by trees & groves that there is no look of bareness anywhere. Today the wind seems strong & blustering but

The scene shines brightly.

There are many pleasant-people here, all so desirous to be pleasant - & so little taken up with themselves, as far as one sees in meeting them - It really is an education to mix with this sort of people, & I am so glad that Ruth & Clare have both had some of it. I wish the boys could also. I think quite of B.S. & his cold. I have seen he would shake it off in a place like this, & have much to do with polish him up. He is good grace, & will polish quite well. Mr. Barton leaves today & farewells & regrets are to be heard on every hand while mother like invariable fate has gone up stairs & is waiting for me to run with her, so up I must go - I finish when I get the next chance -
