Kensington Palace.
London.

My dear Dr. Dawson.

At Montreal this Monday, I saw in the Museum
a piece of pink marble or serpentine with small black specks & spots of mica or hornblende. It seemed to me precisely the same as some so called marble found in the Island of Tyne on the

Lat coast of Iceland —
on the rock there are Silurian, this is not improbable.

My father is very desirous to compare the Canadian with his Scotch variety of

This "Pink Marble" —

Do you think you will procure for him another piece.

That in the Museum, was I think, said to have been near Orange.

This is a case near the oval headed end of the building
if I recollect right.

Let me wish you a very happy New Year

& believe me

Yours
Luther.
