(Mrs. Barrett Wendell)
(1877.)

Mrs. Barrett Wendell tells me that in July 1877, She and her father were at Tadoussac , and found W. O., the young doctor in charge at the hotel. The tintype shows him with Mrs. Wendell and Mr. Andrew Fisk and some one else. She has the liveliest recollections of his charm and personality, and was corresponding frequently afterwards, though she resently destroyed all the letters except two;- October 8, '77 and August 28, '78. She has a copy of a volume of poems, Songs of Two Worlds, 1878, by the author of the Epic of Hades (Lewis Morris) which he sent her.

My dear Miss Greenough

The paper you kindly sent, containing the notice of your sister's death, arrived on Saturday. Please accept my sincere sympathy in this your bereavement, and express the same to your Father.

I send to-day a little volume which will recall the pleasant memories of Tadoussac . It should have been sent before, but there has been an unavoidable delay in getting a copy, as our "Proper Lessons" differ from those in use in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. I have added to it Keble's "Christian Year"

Yours sincerely,
WM. OSLER.
