"Dr. Darwin's paper on injuries to the foetus [Med News Nov] reminds me of an interesting experience which I had in the North West
→ in 1886, which is worth placing on record. Mr. Fred Brydges had kindly met our party at the Postage to take us over the Manitoba and North-Western Road, and he mentioned that two days before, a woman, while in the water-closet on the train, had given birth to a child, which had dropped to the track and had been found alive some time after."
