

COPY.

CUS 917/109.13'12

To J. Maclean

Ms. 112

January 13th, 1910.

Dear Mac:-

You remember our North Atlantic Medical Society; I do not believe you ever had a copy of the enclosed which I wrote out shortly after the trip.

I am going over Harry T's section which is A 1.

Love to Amy.

Sincerely yours,

Wm. Osler.

This was the changed copy and not the one printed in the pamphlet. - J. Mac

11 801/712512

MEDICO-NAUTICAL STUDIES.
By Members of the North Atlantic Medical Society.

Edited by
Dr. Francis Verdon
of
S.S. "Campania."
Perpetual President.

The volume containing about 700 pages will be issued from the Utopian Press,
Thomas Moore & Sons, Atlantas. Price £1.

C O N T E N T S.

- I. A study of the 'sea-change' mentioned in the "Tempest" as a key to the Shakespeare-Baconian controversy.
By James Tyson.
- II. The minimal lymph pressure in the ampullae as a cause of sea-sickness
By Harvey Cushing.
- III. The otoconial rattle in sea-sickness. A study in aural auscultatory physics.
By Maitland Ramsay.
- IV. On Broadbent's theory of steady dextral cerulean vision as a preventative in the disease.
By William Osler.
- V. A demonstration of the centripetal course of the neuro-electrical vagal waves of Rosenbach, with ten charts.
By T. MacRae.
- VI. A comprehensive investigation on marine phosphenes with their relation to latitude and longitude.
By J. A. Andrews.
- VII. A statistical inquiry into the sequelae of sea-sickness in ten thousand consecutive cases treated with specifics.
By Francis Verdon.
- VIII. On the chemistry of aqua-verdin. A new gastro-cutaneous sea pigment.
By Campbell Howard.
- IX. A comparative study of the effects of prolonged sea-sickness on (1) drinkers, (2) abstainers.
By T. G. Roddick.
- X. The aesthetics of sea-sickness with six photogravures from sketches, by Sargent and Abbey.
By Henry Barton Jacobs.
- XI. Salt as the cause of appendicitis - results of a collective investigation showing the extraordinary frequency of the disease after sea voyages.
By Herbert Bruce.
- XII. A sociological inquiry upon the influence of sea travel on birth rate of different communities.
By James Stewart.