Dear Chittenden,

I am sorry to have to postpone my Silliman lectures, but the truth is I have been tied up very unexpectedly with the revision and partial re-writing of my Text-book, and have only just got free after seeing it through the press. I had hoped to get clear of it early in the year, but there were all sorts of delays, and it is very hard to work with the printers so far from one's base.

I have got a certain amount of work done on the lectures, and have talked over with Stokes the question of some supplementary talks with the undergraduates. Hadley was with us last week, and he thinks it would be quite easy to arrange to have the lectures in the spring. I do hope you are keeping in good condition.

Sincerely yours,
