

Letter from Dr. Adami to W. O.

Pembroke House,
133, Oxford St. W.1

Typewritten.

November, 12th, 17.

My dear Sir William,

Sir Aucland Geddes writes to me that he thinks that he can run down with me to Oxford on Saturday afternoon or Sunday next. This in answer to a suggestion I received from Sherrington that he would like to show him the anatomical arrangements and developments at Oxford.

I propose that we go to the Randolph, as that will give us greater freedom of action, but may I bring him in to see you either at lunch or for afternoon tea on Sunday, in accordance with your suggestion when I mentioned this matter to you before?

Yours ever

Lt.Col. A.D.M.S

We went up as suggested and stayed with the Osler's. In a talk with Sherrington I learnt that Robinson might in a year or two retire from the professorship of Anatomy at Oxford, and Geddes thought that here might be a post bellum post.

Sir William Osler, Bart,
13, Norham Gardens,
Oxford.
