Daniel Defoe

A Journal of the Plague Year, being observations x x x during the last great visitation in 1665. Written by a citizen who continued all the while in London. London 1722

[Defoe's]
"One of his most remarkable performances, the Journal of the Plague Year, appeared in 1722.
It was suggested by the dread of the plague which had recently broken out in France, and the narrative has an air of authenticity which imposed upon Dr. Mead who had been appointed to report upon desirable precautions.
He quotes it as our authority on his Discourse on the Plague (1744)." D.N.B.
