FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT. THE CONVENTION OF THE LEAGUE. TORONTO, Tuesday Morning, Nov. 6. The wires being down, I was unable to send while you a telegraphic report of the proceedings of the League yesterday. The question of an elective of Legislative Council occupied the whole day, and was supported in able speeches by Messrs. Gowan, w Gamble, Scobie, and John Duggan, all of whom opposed it at Kingston. Messrs. Willson, of Quebec, Forsyth, of Kingston, and McDonald, of Gananoque, former supporters of the measure, also made able speeches in its favor. The advocates of the elective principle, had all the argument on their side, whilst those who opposed it had nothing better to offer than old exploded dog- | b mas about the Prerogative of the Crown, British Connexion, Loyalty, &c. We never expected to see calculated to make converts, and if persisted in, Tory of the truth to the truth of the tr Montreal on the 10th ult., and reached the rural the Transcript frankly acknowledge its error, will only tend to engender bad feelling in the comdistricts about this date. What have been the results?

It was intended as an expression of opinion on the bound of the sentiments of a majority of our respectable citi-sentiments of a behalf of those that signed it; the fears of its enemies have magnified it into a Manifesto.

Fas est ab hoste doceri, we adopt the name, though we never intended to give it a cognomen so magnification. When it was issued, none of the miloquent. It is a question that can only be settled by reason and argument, and at the polls. Let those favorable to the movement in Lower Canada, where it has taken deep root, organized monostration. It is a question that the Whige elected their County ticket by not believe. They understand the true state of matters too well; and their intelligence is not likely to be headwinked by the new properties. we never intended to give if a cognomen so magniloquent. When it was issued, none of the

This movement is one of the first furnits. jorities. Were we to indulge in the anticipations of their former political opponents, we might say, at the Transcript. The smile would merge into their former political opponents, we might say, a broad laugh if the getting up of the Protest was demnity Bill, and the cold and insulting indiffewith joy, that the days of the present Reform Mithoroughly understood. If the yeomanry were demnity Bill, and the cold and insulting indifference manifested towards the very bone and sinew nistry are numbered, but we make the averment aware—as our citizens are—that the Protest was of the country—towards the men who have with no such feelings—we would not triumph forced into being, after tedious negotiation be- staked fortune, honor, and reputation, to preserve over their fall—we await it with calmness and tween the Protectionists and a few Free Traders, British Connexion in these Colonies, have done confidence. that, after the reference to the Horse Guards, and time for cooling blood, would have been rather doubtful. The preceding evening it was different. Major Macdougall does not monopolise all the "indignation" in the world, though he is so liberal in its use. I also was indignant at the attempt (for such it appeared to me) to trample down my friend, a gentleman as well born and bred as any officer of the Royal Canadian Rifles.

And Major Macdougall must recollect that he has never yet told us, or the world, the most important thing—namely, in what capacity he was acting. Mr. Baxter said he was not his "friend."

It diminished that power. If such was its object, that letter was a most unlikely one to accomplish it. I drew a very different inference from it at the time; but as it seems that inference was incorrect, it is no use to say now what it was,

Major MacDougall accuses me, in my efforts to elicit the truth of perverting it by putting "leading questions." As he disclaims inuendos I am bound to presume that he does not know the nature of the imputation which this phrase important thing—namely, in what capacity he was acting. Mr. Baxter said he was not his "friend."
